Stress in the City

Since Sept. 11, doctors are hearing increased complaints of anxiety, insomnia and depression from people who live or work in New York City. According to some reports, consumption of alcohol, drugs of abuse and fat-laden “comfort” foods skyrocketed.

Come hear top experts on the neuropsychology of stress, including leaders of the New York Consortium for Trauma Treatment, speak and answer questions on the brain’s reaction to post-Sept. 11 urban unease.

How long-term stress changes the brain and influences our behavior
